Thinking about the Arguments in British Document Set A-1

1.	Earlier in this paragraph Jacob argues the British are "morally superior race, governed by higher motives" than the Indians. What would he argue are the British "higher motives?" How might the British behave to set a "high example?"
2.	A series of severe droughts struck India in the latter half of the 1800's, and 25 major famines (food shortages) during this time that killed 30-40 million Indians. British economic policies had encouraged farmers to switch from growing food crops to cash crops such as cotton that could be sold to other countries. What role might that policy have played in the famines?
3.	Do you think Jacob (Document 2 above) would point to the actions of the Civil Service as setting "a high example?" If so, in what ways?
