

Using the Legal Strategy Assessment

The city council has recently passed a new law (rule) that requires all fast food restaurants in Russell County to stop serving food to children under the age of ten. The members of the council believe that too many Americans are overweight. This law hopes to get young children to make better food choices. Older children do not have to follow the new law because council members believe many of them have probably already developed poor eating habits. Some people are angered by this decision, but the city council believes it has the right to do whatever is necessary to protect children from becoming overweight.

Assuming that you LOVE fast food, how might you get this policy changed using the legal strategy we've discussed?

The way I would do it is how going to the supreme court, and sue them.

How is your strategy of getting the law changed similar to or different than the strategy used by Civil Rights activists? Give at least one example.

It similar because she went to the court and sued the Board of Education. There different because ^{we are} suing something else

Using the Legal Strategy Assessment

The city council has recently passed a new law (rule) that requires all fast food restaurants in Russell County to stop serving food to children under the age of ten. The members of the council believe that too many Americans are overweight. This law hopes to get young children to make better food choices. Older children do not have to follow the new law because council members believe many of them have probably already developed poor eating habits. Some people are angered by this decision, but the city council believes it has the right to do whatever is necessary to protect children from becoming overweight.

Assuming that you LOVE fast food, how might you get this policy changed using the legal strategy we've discussed?

I would schedule myself and an appointment and I would talk to them and see if they say no. I will see them fast food and if they say no I will see them.

How is your strategy of getting the law changed similar to or different than the strategy used by Civil Rights activists? Give at least one example.

My new law is people can have fast food all they want. My law is similar to their law is because we both are going to see someone and get what we want. Hence it is different because she followed the 13th and