

International War Tribunal: Possible Actions

As members of the International War Tribunal, you are tasked with assigning actions to the people who come before the tribunal. Your job is to select a course of action and explain it with evidence. Your four choices are:

- Immediate punishment:
 - This is the choice if the evidence against the defendant is overwhelming. If you pick this, the case is sent to a Criminal Court for confirmation and immediate sentencing
- Trial:
 - This is the choice if the evidence against the defendant is concerning and needs to be deliberated by a Criminal Court. If you pick this, the case is sent to a Criminal Court for a trial.
- Re-education:
 - This is the choice if the evidence against the defendant is concerning, but there are other mitigating factors as well. If you pick this, the defendant is sent to a program for counseling, orientation, and education to help them understand their role in the tragedies, but also recognize that they tried to make different choices.
- Forgiveness:
 - This is the choice if the evidence against the defendant reveals many efforts to combat the injustices of this time. If you pick this, the defendant is considered free and able to return to their community.

International War Tribunal: Possible Actions

As members of the International War Tribunal, you are tasked with assigning actions to the people who come before the tribunal. Your job is to select a course of action and explain it with evidence. Your four choices are:

- Immediate punishment:
 - This is the choice if the evidence against the defendant is overwhelming. If you pick this, the case is sent to a Criminal Court for confirmation and immediate sentencing
- Trial:
 - This is the choice if the evidence against the defendant is concerning and needs to be deliberated by a Criminal Court. If you pick this, the case is sent to a Criminal Court for a trial.
- Re-education:
 - This is the choice if the evidence against the defendant is concerning, but there are other mitigating factors as well. If you pick this, the defendant is sent to a program for counseling, orientation, and education to help them understand their role in the tragedies, but also recognize that they tried to make different choices.
- Forgiveness:
 - This is the choice if the evidence against the defendant reveals many efforts to combat the injustices of this time. If you pick this, the defendant is considered free and able to return to their community.